OREGON NATIONAL FOREST.

The Oregon National Forest lies in the northern portion of the Cascade Mountains in Oregon, extending from the Columbia River southward to the divide between the Clackamas and Santiam rivers. The timber in this region was formerly unbroken to an elevation of about 7,000 feet on Mt. Hood and some lesser peaks, but now only about two-thirds of the Forest remains undestroyed by fire.

The western slopes of this Forest are drained by the Sandy and Clackamas rivers. The city of Portland obtains its water supply from the Bull Run River, a branch of the Sandy River. The watershed of the Bull Run River is closed to the public by Act of Congress; all other parts of the Forest are open to the public.

Among the roads on the Oregon National Forest is the historic Barlow Toll Road, which was built before 1850 and which was the old emigrant route across the Cascade Mountains into the Willamette Valley. There are in all, 135 miles of wagon road and over 500 miles of trail which make accessible the fishing and hunting, mineral springs, camping places, scenic and other recreation features.
